At low latitudes, the effect of reduced upwelling prevails. The resulting reduction in marine productivity, and other marine resources, could become detectable in the near future, if appropriate long-term observing systems are implemented.

Herve Le Treut - Academia.edu
Herve Le Treut is Professor at the Pierre and Marie Curie University, Director of the Pierre-Simon Laplace Institute (IPSL) and a member of the French Academy of Sciences. His work focuses on numerical modelling of the climate system and the understanding of radiative climate disturbances, in particular the role of the additional greenhouse effect related to human activities.
